Veuve Clicquot is bringing its "Solaire Culture" exhibit to Los Angeles.

The traveling showcase, which kicked off in Tokyo in June, dives into Veuve Clicquot's history and cultural influence — celebrating 250 years of the Champagne house.

Brought to life by art historian Camille Morineau and designer Constance Guisset, the L.A. stop will be open from Oct. 26 to Nov. 16 at 468 North Rodeo Drive in Beverly Hills, California — LVMH Moët Hennessy Louis Vuitton's 22,250-square-foot pop-up space expected to become a Cheval Blanc hotel (currently housing Louis Vuitton's "200 Trunks, 200 Visionaries"). It's free to the public, for those aged 21 and older.

"We are very proud to announce an exhibition curated entirely by women, led by Camille Morineau and Constance Guisset, and solely featuring internationally renowned women artists," offered Carole Bildé, chief marketing and communications officer of Veuve Clicquot. "Madame Clicquot showed us the way; guided by her, the house is committed to supporting bold and creative women who forge a path for generations to come."
